Grandma's room I regarded as a dark den of primitive rites and practices. She had two wobbly old candlesticks. Grandma lit the white candles and waved her hands over the flames. Grandma kept her room clean and tidy. She had a very impressive hope chest covered with a shawl and on her dresser a hairbrush and comb. There was a plain rocking chair under a lamp so she could read her prayer book. And on an end table beside the chair was a flat box packed with a medicinal leaf that was shredded like tobacco. This was the centerpiece of her most consistent and mysterious ritual. She removed the lid from this blue box and turned it on its back and used it to burn a pinch of the leaf. It made tiny pops and hisses as it burned. She turned her chair toward it and sat inhaling the thin wisps of smoke.
